

Forum Audio Files Online

Twelve listening passages that originally appeared on vinyl records in this journal over twenty years ago are now available on the Internet, courtesy of antimoon.com, a Web site about learning English for students of ESL/EFL. Tomasz P. Szynalski and Michal Ryszard Wojcik, the Webmasters at www.antimoon.com, have posted digitized audio files of ten shaggy dog jokes that appeared in the October 1980 issue of English Teaching Forum and the “Going to California” train story that appeared in the January 1990 issue. All the files can be downloaded for free. Everyone at the Office of English Language Programs sincerely appreciates the work of Tomasz and Michal, first, for resurrecting these jokes and stories, and second, for their willingness to make these materials available to English learners and their teachers all over the world.

New Publication in English for Academic Purposes (EAP)

Volume 1, number 1 of the new Journal of English for Academic Purposes was published last year with Liz Hamp-Lyons (Polytechnic University of Hong Kong) and Ken Hyland (City University of Hong Kong) serving as co-editors. The aim of this new journal is to disseminate information and views so that teachers and researchers in EAP can keep current with and contribute to developments in the field. JEAP will publish articles, book reviews, conference reports, and academic exchanges covering a wide range of linguistic and educational topics related to EAP, including methodology, teacher education, assessment, needs analysis, materials development, and the socio-politics of English in academic uses and language planning. (ISSN 1475-1585)
